Excerpt from Brief Extracts From the Works of Isaac Penington HE was the eldest son of Isaac Pehing ton, many years an alderman of London, and, for two years successively, mayor of the city. He was born about the year 1617: his educa tion was suitable to his qualityit amongst men, having the advantages of the schools and universities of his own country, jowed with the conversation of some of the most consider able men of his time. He arrived at manhood, at a period when England was agitated with the tempest of civil commotion, by means of the discord between Charles I. And his Parli ament; and as the father of Penington was himself a warm partisan, in a conspicuous station, and intrusted with concerns of consid crable importance; the son, had his temper inclined him, might probably soon have risen to eminence in the republic. But he refused the greatness and glory of the world, and chose rather a life dedicated to religion and retirement. Having received impressions of piety very early, they had so good at effect upon him, that he was preserved from the evils of the age, and became the wonder of his kin.
