

Look At Yourself

John Sherman presents a clear and coherent view of the actual problem that makes human life seem so unsatisfying, and suggests a simple and revolutionary method to bring an end to dissatisfaction and misery once and for all. This method is so simple that it requires nothing of you but the willingness to look within and notice yourself from time to time, whenever it occurs to you to do so. Like many of us, John spent most of his life believing himself to be trapped in a difficult, bewildering and probably meaningless life.

Then, in the fall of 1994, he happened upon the world of spiritual aspiration and attainment, of wondrous tales of enlightenment and delicious insights of non-dual understanding and, not for the first time in his life, found himself head-over-heels in love with an idea; and, also not for the first time in his life, he threw himself headlong into seeking its promised fruit. Enlightenment ensued. After about a year of this, his enlightenment collapsed, all the beauty vanished, all sense of clarity and all vestige of spiritual attainment disappeared, and he was left empty-handed, wishing he had never even heard the word enlightenment all the while still caught in the grip of its sweet hope. He has spoken of that time as his year in hell. He set out to find just one thing that he could do for himself that would settle, once and for all, the question whether human life without fear and misery was even possible.
